ILANGA LASE NATAL

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK.

As a general election is close at hand, and seeing that the various political parties are already holding Congresses and stamping the country for support, it will be interesting for us Natives to examine their Native policy. In the list of resolutions adopted at the recent Unionist Party Congress held at Bloemfontein we look in vain for any hint, far less any helpful or constructive policy, with regard to the position and condition of our Native people. One of their resolutions indeed referred to the services of the Coloured Corps in the war. It runs as follows:—"Recognising the great services rendered by the Coloured citizens of the Union in the services of the Empire and allied forces during the Great war, the Congress of the Unionist Party pledges itself to use every endeavour to secure adequate provision for their dependents and for those who have been disabled". Further than this resolution connected with the war, the Unionist Party is silent on the Native question, and the rest of the political programme is full of resolutions for the sole benefit of only one section of the people, and that section the least of all, namely, the European community. If the Unionist Party represents the highest British ideals then they have forgotten, wilfully or unwilfully, their duty to the Natives in omitting altogether to give the country a lead towards a just, sympathetic and statesmanlike Native policy.

Turning to the political trumpeting of the South African Party, we see little else in their policy than a wholesale condemnation of the Nationelists' Republicanism. At the same time General Smuts is straining every nerve to win over to his Party every Nationalist who can be persuaded to give up his pet theory of independence. In a speech delivered recently at Weltevreden, General Smuts, dwelling on the divisions among the ranks of the Dutch, spoke as follows:—"Division would mean that the Native would rule the country." We quote again from the "Natal Mercury" as follows:—"Replying to another question as to the American Negro movement, General Smuts pointed out to them the danger which existed in the future in regard to non-European people.

This is certainly plain speaking, and we can easily read the heart of this Afrikander premier. There is a deep fear, an intense dread of the Native in his utterances Why? If General Smuts looked a little under the surface of his feelings, would he not find that all this fear amounting to terror arises from the fact that the Native has not been treated with justice and humanity by the European community, both English and Dutch? No European and no South African Government need fear the Native if he is granted those rights to which he is entitled as a British Subject, and until South Africa recognises the principle for which the British fought the Boers, "Equal rights for every civilized man" under the British flag, that fear will be more and more intensified.

Health Notes
By Hygienist No. 40

Health is, as from its source, perfect, but is naturally variable as it is carried on by varying personalities: but disorders cannot take place until the confines of order are reached, hence, there can be no ill-health in the realms of the spiritual. Only in the lower ranges of the psychic can wrongness originate, the precursory of the psychic being finite. Yet it is from those lower ranges of the psychic that all illness and badness comes. It may appear strange that the origin of illness should have to be traced back to the common origin of evil, but so it is. The stern demands of logic make it imperative that it should be so. Thus knowing its point of inception in the collective finite human, we can be prepared to follow the cause of defect or disease, and hence to make advance beyond the limits of mere symptomology. In such cases students will be better able to understand and treat the cases that come before them. The merely sensuous-minded always favour drugs such as appeal to their normal thinking, but that seldom applies to their particular cases. But there is now a gradual ingrafting of better modes of treatment, which however eligible has to have the brunt of hostility shown by the ultra sensuals of pharmacy. This is not a case of the fool may run and read especially if he is to rightly apply what he reads. It is rather an invitation to deeply consider the whole problem as to why people suffer, and what wisdom suggests as a remedy.

Letter by Quiz No. 93.

It is strange how people try to beguile themselves in matters social as well as in matters economical and theologic, and it is this frequent errancy that brings about most of the National troubles. The recent Railway strike in England gives great evidence of that kind, which also Irish troubles support and Racial hatred in South Africa corroborates. Few persons see that these evils are akin, and that they can be quelled by similar means Unity of purpose is the brief title of the cure, as can be applied, but why is it not? The lazy waywardness that has grown up so mightily is what stands in the way and we need not expect a decrease of the flames until we reduce the combustibles as well as the combustion that keep the evil going. The communal system is the only open way to lasting peace and comfort. You don't believe it? You have not tried it! As touching the economic, there is nothing better offering than the proposed mode of the National guild system. Why do people not try it? B cause they are dull and customridden. They will not venture: they will spend a £100 on any sort of foolery, but will not devote 100 hours to serious consideration of the subject. Are we to blame? You ask. Of course you are. How long you have to sweat funk and welter in the atrocious mire of your own making, depends entirely upon the time you resolve to hug the serpent-like pride to your bosoms. "I tell thee thou shalt not come out thence until thou hast paid the uttermost farthing."

The Cure of Witchcraft.

By JAMES B. McCORD M. D.

The black shadow that broods over Africa has fastened on that fair land the "bad name" of "Dark Continent" can be explained and described by one word—witchcraft.

It is the African's religion, his only religion—a religion of evil. He believes in a multitude of spirits—and an autocratic, unsympathetic superspirit as the most powerful of all. The air about him and the earth beneath, the woods and the streams are peopled by these spirits, and every article of nature which is supposed to have medicinal or magic properties owes such properties to the spirit which it possesses or which works through it. As a religion it is primitive and it is powerful. The teachings which it inculcates and the practices which it encourages and reqfires are utterly and forever opposed to the teachings of the Christian religion.

The witch doctor is the great high priest of this religion. He is priest, diviner, and judge. He is also the family physician He has no knowledge of disease and its rational treatment, but he has a stupendous belief in the power of magic to cure all manner of sickness. Thus qualified he goes forth to relieve the expectant mother in her agony, to treat the baby with its wasting disease due to malnutrition, or to banish the evil spirits from the strong man with the raging fever. And he leaves death and invalidism in his wake.

It is belief that sickness and all other calamities are caused by witchcraft that holds the African natives in the bondage of fear. It is the belief that only through the magic of the witch doctor can disease be cured that gives him his great power over the minds and hearts of the people. Get rid of the witch doctor and his teachings and we remove the greatest obstacle to the spread of the gospel in Africa and to the enlightenment of the people of the Dark Continent.

But how are we going to do it? That is the problem before the Christian Church and the missionary societies to day.

You can preach to the natives and you can teach them their belief in witchcraft is folly and that the witch doctor is a fraud. They simply will not believe you. This belief, this religion, ages old, has too strong a hold on them to be lightly brushed aside.

Moreover, the African native, like other people, must have his doctor when he is sick, and he must have his medicine. The witch doctor, with his magic, is the only doctor available. So long as sickness prevails and so long as he is the only doctor in the field, the witch doctor's position is impregnable and his influence all-powerful.

If we put a better doctor in his place, a Christian doctor, trained in modern medical science, the case is different. The medical missionary is recognized as one of the strongest forces in Africa to undermine the natives' belief in witchcraft and to destroy the influence of the witch doctor.

But the medical missionaries that we can put into Africa are so few that their influence can hardly be felt by the 14,000,000 natives of the Dark Continent. If we should undertake to furnish one doctor for every 10,000 inhabitants, we should need 14,000 doctors, and even that number would be inadequate for the need. To meet Africa's need with medical missionaries from Europe or America is manifestly out of the question.

Now a better plan is available and workable. I propose that we give the Africans themselves a medical education, that we replace the witch doctor with a man of his own race and color, but well grounded in the tenets of the Christian religion, and throughly trained in modern science. The salvation of Africa must eventually come thorough the efforts of the African himself. When every community has preacher and native teacher and Christian native doctor, the day of the witch doctor will have passed and the day of Africa's redemption will be at hand.

This is a good-sized proposition and it cannot be done in a day. But if the 120 Doctors, more or less, who are now doing medical missionary work in Africa could combine their efforts in missionary medical schools in various parts of the continent, one generation might see Africa well equipped with well-trained native medical men each one a missionary to free the people from their dread superstitions of former generations.

I am planning, on my return to my work in Natal and Zululand, to open a Medical school for the Zulu young men, and to prepare them to go out among their own people and help them in their sickness and by their influence, to free them from their old-time superstition and their bondage to the witch doctor.

It is fitting that this work should begin among the Zulus, for they easily lead the other African tribes in initiative, intellect, and character While the work will be primarily for the Zulu, we trust that it will be the beginning of a work that will extend throughout the continent.

The Zulu is capable of receiving a medical education. This has been proven by numerous instances in which Zulu young men and women have entered European or American colleges and universities, where they have shown that in ability they are little, if any, inferior to their white fellow-students.

Before entrance to the medical school the Zulu student must have had what is equivalent to an American high school education. More many be required later. There are many Zulus who, at present, can meet this requirement.

The Zulu is keen for a medical education. I have often been asked by the Zulu young men when I would open a medical school for them. I anticipate that when a course in medicine is offered the applications for entrance will far exceed the capacity of the school.

The school must be small at first, probably not more than twenty students. With this number we can give each student careful and personal attention. The course must comprise at least five years of intensive medical study; more if necessary. At the beginning of such an enterprise quality counts more than quantity.—"The Missionary Herald."

GENERAL NOTES.

The colour Bar both in its economic and social ranges is of high educative worth. The people of South Africa are scarcely cognisant of that as yet, but circumstances will gradually force that upon them. Pride of couse stands in the way, for there is no folly without pride. The hard facts of creation will not give way to the fuddling notions of would-be aristocrats. But for the Coloureds to suppose that the proposals of the Taalites are in any way reliable, would be the rankest folly. We cannot believe that they are such fools.

o o o

No, the Bantu and the Coloureds must push through the mass of the obstruction and embitterment and win by deft stability those rights which Nature entitles them to, and which would be sheer cowardice to desert. The contention must be based on natural ability, and the silly swagger of the would-be "Baas" will be decided by that.

o o o

There is one thing that our people and the Coloureds will have to beware of and that is the need of the many fictitious items so often included in the cost of living, the glare and novelty of things that attract the desires of both men and women, but which slowly but firmly press them down to the bowing to the mandate of oppressors. The white noodle across the Brine falls into that ditch so skilfully prepared by those who love money more than the well-being of their fellow creatures, but the knowing it should prevent the Afro-people upholding such victimising. We have to do our duty to others as well as to ourselves. It is, as said a year ago, a war of brains so the Afro-people feel the they have that brains, and prove that they are so blessed.
