FOREWORD

For the mines and factories, mills, firms, municipal and industrial compounds where they work, all over the Union, the thousands of Natives who find employment there have a nomenclature all of their own. It dates back to the olden days when the personality of the employer or compound manager and his treatment of his men loomed large in the untutored minds straight from the reserves. Back at home the pros and cons of working for Tandabantu ("love the people") or Mehlobomvu ("red eyes") or Satane (whose name probably explains itself) were eagerly canvassed in the kraals, and the worker concerned himself but little with the correct name of his employers, a name which in many cases he found impossible to grasp, to pronounce and to remember. At best he took that part of the European name which seemed to him the easiest to pronounce and twisted it into a certain conformity with Bantu speech. The results of these attempts may be seen in the following lists, and offer an interesting field of study to the phonologist.

The reason for compiling these lists is however not a scientific one but is to be found in a practical need. The industrial worker is making a steadily increasing use of the Post Office to send home money and goods and communicate with his family. But though these letter-writers know enough to write and address their mail, they only too frequently do not know enough to do it correctly. The result is a considerable problem for the Post Office, for thousands of letters and parcels are sent every month to the Returned Letter Office in Cape Town, and have to be destroyed. I had always been aware of the existence of smaller lists similar to the present one, published on a commercial basis and therefore presumably meeting a definite demand, but it was only when Postal officials took me through the R.L.O. and I surveyed with dismay the enormous piles of undeliverable mail, and thought of the thousands of Natives who had trustingly posted hard-earned money, dearly-bought goods and laboriously written letters, only to discover later they had never arrived, therefore invariably blaming the Post Office and suspecting the White Man in general, that I decided to assist in a small way by making a comprehensive list that might be of use to sorters, and help some Natives to address their mail more correctly.

There has been no attempt to give the exact pronunciation in the most correct orthography, as that would have defeated the object in view, owing to the fact that apart from bad handwriting and insufficient addressing, bad spelling is to a large extent responsible for letters going astray. The names given are therefore in those forms likely to be found on badly addressed letters, and represent many spellings now obsolete, and mixtures of all of them.

The first part of this work groups names on a territorial basis, listing them under their respective post offices, the Native names of which are given when known. Those on the Witwatersrand are grouped under Reef. The second part is an alphabetical list which gives cross-reference to all data assembled, whether European or Native.

A list of the sources from which this list was compiled follows below. A number of names were also supplied by the Director of Native Labour, whose assistance is gratefully acknowledged. Whilst it is true that the list began as a compilation from the sources mentioned, it is now much more than that, for Mr Myburgh, whom we may call the author of this work, discovered upon checking up that most if not all of our sources were so teeming with errors that for the purpose for which they were intended, viz. the correct addressing of letters, they can be regarded more as a menace than a help. Every effort has been made to ensure accuracy under all heads but of course no guarantee of correctness can be given.
