Nqina son of Ngono of the Langeni quarrelled with the chief Bebe and settled near Ndaba on the Bedlane hills near the W Umfolosi S'kona married a daughter of Ngotsha, grandson of Nquina. Her mother was Kingase and she was called Songiya and became the mother of Mpande.

Ngotsha died in Shaka's time and was succeeded by his heir Mposwa Succession went through him to Somfula, Lokotwayo, Sitozi to Mtekelezi who became chief in 1910

Mpande granted them their present territory between Somkele and Nongoma about the Mpembeni hills.

C6684 Correspondence respecting certain boundary questions in Zululand.

Nol Mitchell to Knutsford 27/10/91 pl

Enc5 Res Comm to Gov 19/10/91 p9

Report of Commission appointed by Gov Mitchell to define boundary lines between tribes north of the black umfolosi

p23 Diary of the Commissioners 17/9/91

Hlabisa boundary about to be laid down and asked for opinion. / "Landelisa, as the son and heir and representative of Somfula, who was not present, spoke to the following effect. He related the former history of the Hlabisa tribe, stated that they had come from the Enembe District on the north bank of the Lower Tugela River, had been placed by the King's ~~direction~~ under the charge of Mapita in the Hlabisa district, and that Somfula, by the King's direction, had been reared by Mapita. He maintained that Somfula was the rightful Chief of the Hlabisa tribe, and not Mbopa; that though the latter was the elder, he belonged not even to the Kohlo, but an inferior house. He admitted that Mbopa, having attained manhood first and having a kraal of his own, had taken charge of the tribe during the minority of Somfula, but he pointed out that, as soon as the latter had come of age, Mpande gave special directions that he should assume the charge of the tribe. He asserted that, though Mbopa was the elder, he had always acknowledged Somfula as their heir; that, until his death, they had lived as friends; that it was only after that event that his son and adherents disputed Somfula's right to the Chieftainship, and claimed it for Mbopa's heir. That quarrels ensued from that time between the followers of Somfula and Mbopa respectively, and the animosity became so great when Sibebu was appointed one of the 13 Chiefs after the Zulu war*, and the former gave their allegiance to him, that Mbopa's people attacked those of Somfula, and bloodshed ensued, and ever since dissensions have existed between the two factions. Miso, a spokesman for Mtumbu, who was present, directly traversed the statements of Landelisa. He asserted that the "labis" district was given to Mbopa by Mpande, that the country was Nzobo's, the father of Mgamule. He ~~next~~ denied that Mapita had any authority over it, or that Somfula was placed under him to be brought up. He maintained that the only locality belonging to Somfula was the ground given to him by Mfusi on the east side of the Ikiwane River. He pointed out that Mgotsha was the grandfather of both Mbopa and Somfula; that the fathers of the latter were Holisibi and /24/ Mposwa respectively, but he admitted that Mposwa was the eldest son and heir of Mgotsha."
